- I am a stingray, a kind of cartilaginous fish that live in the shallow waters.
- I have a flat body. My skeleton is made up of cartilages (just like your ears). While my eyes are located on the dorsal side, my mouth, nostrils, and gill slits are situated on my underbelly.
- I am an ovoviparous creature. That is, the young are hatched from eggs held within the body of the female.
- I am not usually aggressive and I attack humans only when provoked. Contact with the stinger causes local trauma, pain and swelling. The sting may become fatal only if the affected area is a vital organ.

- I am a California condor, North America's largest flying bird.
- I travel widely to feed on carcasses of deer, pigs, and other animals. I can survive up to two weeks without food.
- My body is black, with white feathers under the wings. I have a long, hooked beak.
- I nest in caves on cliffs.

Camaraderie (Noun)

Camaraderie is friendship and trust shared by people who have gone through an experience together or have known each other for a long time.

Origin: The word camaraderie comes from the French word camarade used to mean roommate or companion or a group of people who share a room. It is further derived from the Old Spanish word camara, meaning "chamber." The word comrade derived from camarade has been used by socialists and communists since 1884 to address a fellow socialist or communist.

Example: The camaraderie of the residents was on display when they came together to start a community kitchen.

Activity: Use the word in a sentence of your own.
